Nat is a registered Psychologist and consultant and has spent almost 20 years combining her clinical and organisational systems knowledge and consulting across a range of industries across public, private and non-government sectors as well as providing clinical work in private practice predominantly in the area of first response, trauma and PTSD.

Nat has experience working in regional and remote areas and has extensive background working with emergency services first responders, critical incidents and disaster management travelling to NZ to the Christchurch earthquake in 2011 with Queensland Fire – Urban search and rescue teams.

Nat spent over 3 years with the regulator in Queensland working across both the work health and wellbeing initiative and undertook the role of Chief Advisor for Psychological Health within Work Health Safety Queensland (WHSQ) to contribute to the development of the Psychosocial Hazards Code of Practice, designing mentally healthy work and to strengthen the regulatory and risk management approaches to work-related psychological health and safety.

Training experience

Nat led the design and development of RTP's Psychological Health and Safety at Work course and has delivered this to multiple organisations across Australia.

Well facilitated to varying learner needs and diverse industries. Extremely knowledgeable in subject matter with clear, concise instructions and content delivery.
